COURSES CREATED

UHON 301 Sonic Painting

University of New Mexico, Honors College

“Sonic Painting” is an interdisciplinary course that examines the relationship between sound, art, and culture, blending hands-on sound production with conceptual insights from physics, psychology, and musicology. Students will create field recordings, design soundscapes, and study rhythm and time inspired by artists like J-Dilla, while analyzing texts such as Dilla Time by Dan Charnas and This Is Your Brain on Music by Daniel J. Levitin. Field trips to recording studios and sound stages provide practical experiences that deepen understanding of acoustics and sound production techniques.

HNRS 1120 Legacy of Hip Hop

University of New Mexico, Honors College

The "Legacy of Hip Hop" course will examine the origins of hip-hop culture, hip-hop visual aesthetics, the four elements of hip-hop, sample-based music production, and fugitivity. The class structure will consist of group discussions and projects where we will recreate musical compositions with the latest recording software. In addition, we will examine readings such as "Can't Stop, Won't Stop: A History of the Hip-Hop Generation" by Jeff Chang and "The Future of Rap is Female" by Niela Orr.

HNRS 2113 My Digital Self

University of New Mexico, Honors College

“My Digital Self” studies authenticity and cultural ownership in the digital age. In this seminar course, students will discuss topics of avatars, digital ownership, the creative process post copyright laws, deepfake as counter-narrative, whether music sampling should be in courtrooms, and objecthood. The class structure will primarily consist of group discussions and analysis of literature, films, and music. We will analyze specific readings such as “The Ecstasy of Influence” by Jonathan Letham, “Real Fake” by Thijs Pepping, and “Restitution: The Return of Cultural Artefacts” by Alexander Herman.

PHTO 391: The Art of Looting

VCUarts, Department of Photography

Students will explore concepts surrounding the implications of using loaded materials, the looting of artifacts, the repatriation of artifacts, and the role subversion can play when creating work from pre-existing media. This course will introduce students to sample-based visual techniques with a technical, historical, and conceptual grounding in appropriation theory.
